The mulberry tree can grow as high as 35 to 55 feet tall. Bermudian cooks combine mulberries with other berries to make dessert and other tasty treats. The berries are great on their own and when frozen make delicious smoothies.

There was a time when lemon trees grew wild around Bermuda and Bermudian cooks found a number of ways to use the fruit in their favourite dishes. The fresh juice of the lemon was used to marinate fish and other seafood caught from our local waters. The rind and juice were used to make fresh lemon pies and preserves. It can also be used with lemon grass to make a tea to aid digestion and ease gas, bloating and upset stomach.

Dandelion greens have carved a reputation in the culinary world as being a healthy addition to garden salads. The leaves have a similar taste to endive and is recommended that they are eaten in early spring or late fall before they turn bitter. The leaves are high in fibre and are used in soups and consumed as a steamed vegetable. The root of the dandelion is used to make herbal coffee and combines well with chicory root for an alternative for coffee.

Chicory is a versatile herb and is used in a variety of ways to heal the body. As a food source, the leaves and roots of the chicory can be eaten as a vegetable or added to salads. The leaves are high in fibre and low in calories. Herbal coffee is made from the root of the chicory plant which makes it a great alternative for people who are sensitive to caffeine. Bermudian folk practitioners use the leaves and flowers to make a herbal tea. The flowers are also used in salads to give colour and unique flavor.

The Bermuda Cedar Tree has served the needs of locals over the centuries from boat building to furniture making and even from a medicinal prospective. The wood is sturdy, and anything made from a Bermuda Cedar Tree would most likely last for centuries if properly cared for. In Bermudian folk culture, cedar berries were used to combat certain illnesses and to add flavor to traditional dishes.
